White Supremacy And Sexual Assault Crimes

Example # 1:

The impact of rape and/or sexual assault crimes can be seen in the very way we live our lives and raise our children because it affects the overall sense of safety. We see rape as a constant barrage of sex and violence in media; only needs to watch the media or read the internet/newspaper to be informed on such an act. Media coverage of sex crimes becomes particularly saturated when there is a high-profiled individual involving the known victim/offender. Bill Cosby was everyone's American dad that was also known as a stand-up comedian, actor, musician, author, soon transitioning to be a convicted sex offender. Harvey Weinstein is a well-known American former film producer. Although he is being accused of nonconsensual sexual interactions with eighty-five people.

Bill Cosby was sentenced to three to 10 years in state prison Tuesday, more than 14 years after he gave Andrea Constand pills that left her incapacitated in his home. " In 2004, Cosby invited Constand to his home near Philadelphia. In the 2017 trial, Constand testified that Cosby gave her three pills that he indicated were "herbal" although claiming different. She said during trial that those pills made her feel uncousious. That's when, she says, Cosby assaulted her. Constant reported the assault to the police in 2005 and filed a civil suit against Cosby when prosecutors initially declined to press charges. Ten years later, a judge unsealed deposition testimony Cosby gave during that civil suit, in which he said he did give Constand pills and there was sexual contact the night of the alleged assault. In the existence of this type of case, this case is an African-American male vs. a Caucasian woman and the charges came up three different times with a 10 year period, although each time there is new evidence every time the case was reopen. In this case, "they" wanted to out Cosby to be out away. The white supremacy of the "victim" in this type of situation is being used to put a man away. She wanted to put the man away; knowing she had the upper hand and "power" to do so. Better yet, someone with high profile reputation isn't going to jail or had a case that last 10 years.

Harvey Weinstein is on the opposite side of the stick. Weinstein is being accused of inappropriate to criminal behavior from requests for massages to intimidating sexual advances to rape from eighty-five woman. Weinstein has denied the allegations. Recently, "A New York judge dismissed count six of Harvey Weinstein's criminal indictment Thursday, which was a criminal sexual act in the first degree." This is the type of behavior that is being controlled by white supremacy; if it was a African American being accused, the courts would makes sure the individual is put away for a selected about of years.

In conclusion, reality is that the difference of skin tones will influence the different outcomes. We cannot afford to continue allowing these rape statistics to occur. We cannot be the nation where every two minutes an American is sexually assaulted. The current system is teaching white boys that their skin color will keep them safe even in cases of violent crimes like rape. If this continues, youth will grow up thinking that white skin gets you off basically free and black skin will get you sent to heavy prison time. Society has become about race and not about the crime. White supremacy is becoming more a mind-game and affecting people to think the lighter the skin, the better chance you have to “walk away” from a crime.

Example # 2:

All Men Are Created Equal Is Untrue

We live in a complex society where “it is self-evident that all men are created equal” is just a saying that is untrue in the modern world.

First, obviously all men are not created equal some of us are strong and some are weak, some are intelligent, and some are not, some stand-out while others blend, some are rich, and some are poor with no food on their plate and so on. We are not born equal but in other people’s point of view, us and every person that has been brought up to this world are equal to every other person. However, we are born to have equal rights, to have the right to own the result of our hard work, to have the rights to make decisions for our own fate, we are entitled to decide what goals to achieve, what beliefs to follow, the right to vote, where to live and whom to marry and that makes us essentially unequal to each other, and that’s fine- it is the right that makes us equal in the end.

Second, every one of us is unique, and we all have different sets of knowledge and skills that we use as our tools to achieve our own goals. Additionally, we all face different trials or challenges which we must conquer that could certainly lead us to success in life. We are unique in many ways, we choose our own destinies, and we have our own unique paths to success, but this does not mean that we have to go through life’s challenges alone. We must share our knowledge, skills, and experiences with members of our communities and learn lessons from people who have faced similar difficulties so that we can achieve success together.

Lastly, while the term “all men are created equal” were considered only to white men who owned properties during at the time of the Declaration of Independence, we all know that it is now been understood to incorporate all mankind among “all men”. With this new comprehension, there are still questions of whether we are still following the universal standard of equality. Are people living in an undeveloped are not understood to be created equal?

In my own experience, growing up in a third world country, it is obvious that people living in a develop country have more chances of success in life and more opportunities to pursue their happiness, live their own life and live in liberty than people who live in an undeveloped country. It is very likely for us to be all equal or to have the same degree of abilities in life, if we were all on the same intellectual wavelength, then there would be no individual thought. Clearly a person will naturally do better at something over another person or vice versa. People are different from each other in many ways that make us unique. We all have different experiences, different skills, and different choices in life and it is not wrong to be different. If we were all the same, then the world would be bland and dull. If we just learn how to share our uniqueness, help others, and enjoy our differences and opportunities we might make this world beautiful.
